What's the difference between flash games and website games, I mean flash games are actually playable games while website games are not? When I go to an online game's website it gives me a really long URL that looks like this: I know that www is just a shortcut for but is the gamename part a link to the site or is it the actual site? If it's a link to the actual site, why do so many games have an id? And what's the gamename part actually used for? It seems like a nice way of being able to tell website games apart from flash games, but what's the advantage of having a different domain name? A: When I go to an online game's website it gives me a really long URL that looks like this: Not always; some websites have a very similar url, like a subdomain at the end of the site, e.g. Why do so many games have an id? It depends on what the developer wants to do with the URL. Sometimes they want it to be a permanent link to the game, like in your example, while sometimes they want the game to be played from a URL which might change, e.g. the profile page in a social network 2d92ce491b
