I need to load data from a server. I have a form which will populate data from the server and a button to submit data. I need the button to only be enabled when the page is first loaded and disabled after that. How can I achieve this? A: You can do this in a service like this: angular.module('myApp.services', []).factory('myFactory', function($http, $rootScope) { var service = {}; service.loading = false; service.doStuff = function() { if(!service.loading) { // do stuff } service.loading = true; } return service; }) So in your controller you can do this: myApp.controller('MyController', ['$scope', 'myFactory', function($scope, myFactory) { myFactory.loading = false; $scope.doStuff = function() { myFactory.doStuff(); }; }); Q: How to prevent horizontal scrolling with AJAX update? I'm trying to find a way to prevent horizontal scrolling with an AJAX update. The problem I am encountering is that when the update is "misses" and the next part of the page is updated, there is horizontal scrolling. I have tried the following: Setting overflow to hidden Redrawing the whole page Neither have worked. It does however
