The script being a mess is a problem only when the parts are bad but when they're good, a script can still be a mess and it makes sense. The script for Mewtwo Strikes Back — what we have is an inordinate amount of footage of Pikachu running and struggling to evolve into Mewtwo, and a lot of the script is actually taken up by explaining it to us. Director Kunihiko Yuyama takes the opportunity to give the audience a number of pieces of exposition. If you've seen the theatrical versions, there isn't a lot of new content in the home release. Watch Mewtwo Strikes Back Episode 7: Flashback of the Past. We can witness Mewtwo Strike in a flashback. Chidori is showing her test-tube baby to the Professor who wants to save her from being killed. Instead, the Professor decides to experiment with Mewtwo on Mew. I really don't think that the story was suited for Mewtwo. It really felt like more of a parody that could've been written to make fun of the whole Mewtwo situation. The dialogue in the dubbed version doesn't really do this. It seems like they didn't think about it too much. In the middle of the episode, the Professor gives Mewtwo to the scientists in the lab. They implant Mewtwo with a life-support system that will allow it to grow and develop. The scientists do their work, but leave the scientists alone. We get to learn about all the things that the scientists do to it in the subsequent episode. For example, they make Mewtwo more human-like, and they eventually try to make it achieve its goal of being a perfect Pokémon. It is only
