Share this post:Demonetisation in India Demonetisation in India has been a popular subject of media and public attention in India. However, the India does not have a unitary policy for demonetisation, instead the rules and regulations for various sectors of economy are varied from time to time. In 2017, the government released Operation

Clean India, a program to rid the Indian economy of black money and dirty money. The declared objective of the program is to curb financial crimes, terrorism and corruption. Some financial institutions and financial experts however have questioned the way the operation is being implemented. Background The Narendra Modi government launched the demonetisation program on 8 November 2016 as part of its 2016-17 budget. The program was reportedly designed to crackdown on the black money and counterfeit currency in circulation in the country. According to a statement by the Finance Minister, the new 500 and 1000 rupee notes will have been in circulation for at least a week prior to the implementation. There is no specific timeline, but the Finance Minister reportedly expects the program to be implemented within one to two months. The government also hoped that this would make it easier to track black money and prevent it from being laundered. The Finance Ministry released a draft of the Income Declaration Scheme for 2016-17 that was submitted to the government in November 2016. The draft stipulates that all India domestic and international travellers would have to declare all their purchases, including the total value and their source. The RBI banned the 500 and 1000 rupee notes from circulation on 9 November 2016. Prime Minister Narendra Modi had taken the decision after considering the impact that the new notes would have on the country's economy. It is estimated that this move could result in the capture of about 90% of the cash hoarded in the country, which had been reported to be around, that has been in circulation for over a decade.
