For just $5, you can become a patron and support independent journalism. There's a procedure that is used in Star Trek films and TV shows. Kirk, in full uniform in the holodeck takes a break to grab some tea. It is an important moment for Kirk/Spock/McCoy to have a moment and a cup of tea together. But, in real life, the situation is a bit different. Having tea with a crew member takes a lot of time. Which is why I bet there are a lot of people who, when they have tea with their friend, it really is tea. I would like to post a transcript of a conversation I had with my friend Dan. Dan: What's for tea?Me: Tea!Dan: What kind of tea?Me: What do you have?Dan: Ugh, I hate the tea.Me: You don't drink tea.Dan: I don't drink that, it's horrible. Can I have some water?Me: Sure. OK, so I'm just going to tag on one more. In the original film, they used real tea

(link) Vulnerability Scanner for Web A: In case anyone wants to know, when using htmlentities() or htmlspecialchars() or any of the other callbacks, there are exceptions to the "you must protect yourself against XSS attacks" requirement. E.g. if(isset($_GET['ref'])) { if(strlen($_GET['ref']) > 11 || preg_match("/[^\A-Z0-9-_/i", $_GET['ref'])) { die(' '); } } I also had to remove the line feed at the end of $_GET['ref'] in order to stop the server throwing a 500 error. It's a bit messy but it worked. Also, whilst doing some research for this answer, I used the source code of one of the sites, and they're both vulnerable. I'm not sure if that helps anyone though. The objective of this project is to characterize in more detail the effects of B-tropic herpesvirus on the reproductive system of the mouse. These studies are currently being conducted in H-2 congenic mice. To accomplish this we are (1) characterizing the reproductive pathology associated with herpesvirus infections in mice in greater detail, (2) determining the role of certain viral-encoded proteins in causing pathological changes in the reproductive system, (3) identifying potential mechanisms by which herpesvirus interacts with the reproductive system, and (4) developing new assays for the detection of latent herpesvirus infections in mouse tissues.#include #include #include class pthread_main; class pthread_io_handler { public: p 3da54e8ca3
