I've also tested this in safari, and it's the same. Any idea? A: .block { border: solid red; } .block { border: none; } Has the same issue. The first matches both.block elements. I believe your first rule is applied; however the second rule has the higher specificity, so it is the only rule that is applied. If you want the second.block rule to be applied, just add another selector: .block { border: solid red; } .

By considering the developmental stage of a cell during its differentiation process, a clear picture of the factor(s) regulating the establishment of the differentiation-prone state as well as the patterning mechanism for the three-dimensional structures emerges. We focus on the specification of the dorsal fate in the amphibian embryo. Just after gastrulation, dorsal-fated cells, which have been specified as a specific subpopulation of cells in the precursors of
