A variable-pitch propeller is known from German Patent Specification No. 29 40 896 in which there is a propeller wheel which is driven by the shaft of a propeller, which propeller wheel is mounted in a changeable pitch drive in such a manner that it can be lifted off the shaft by means of a lifting lever. This arrangement, however, is rather elaborate. Furthermore, in the case of non-ideal adjustment, a deflection of the propeller shaft occurs. JNS.org – A professor at the University of Pennsylvania has recently confessed that women are the second-most likely to believe in conspiracy theories, behind men. Research has consistently shown that women are more likely than men to hear “conspiracy theories” about sex abuse, the September cover story in Psychology Today reports. Sex abuse is one such belief that can potentially have a negative impact on the mental health of women. According to Psychology Today, women who have been sexually abused show higher rates of anxiety, depression, and stress. Additionally, a 2009 cover story for Newsweek showed that between 1980 and 2002, 1 in 4 women were sexually abused by a parent. According to the American Psychological Association (APA), rates of sexual assault have increased during this time period. And, a 2011 study in the Journal of Interpersonal Violence showed that men were more likely to be violent in relationships than women. Women were found to be more likely to use self-defense in response to physical aggression than men. University of Pennsylvania professor Connie MacBeth did a study on the role of gender and conspiracy theories. MacBeth’s research showed that men and women are not only more likely to hear “conspiracy theories” regarding sex abuse than any other topic, they are also more likely to believe that the government is protecting sex abusers. Furthermore, women are more likely to believe in “fear of abuse,” “fear of government,” and “fear of forced medication” than men. MacBeth suggested that women are more likely to believe in “conspiracy theories” about sex abuse because they are more likely to be victims of sexual abuse, or they are “blind victims” of an abusive individual. Additionally, she said that female teachers are more likely to believe in “conspiracy theories” about sex abuse because they witness the abuse of students and are less likely to be a “blind victim.” In the
