WxCopy is a small and useful plugin for the Windows Explorer. You can copy by a mouse-click whole partitions, including locked files. I was wondering about a tool which would use Windows Explorer (provided) to do a recursive copy (on Windows 7, via a liveUSB), instead of relying on an external tool like WinRar or WinZip - or, equivalently, copy files (using Explorer) without restarting the computer. I guess I'm looking for something like this that lets you copy via Explorer. Are there anything like it? A: I found the solution! Thanks everyone for giving a hand! It's called: "PowerCopy Pro" found here: It lets you copy files, delete, rename, extract, compress, etc... It does not require a background service. I don't believe it is free, but is completely free for a single-user home network. Charlie Puth's new music video for “No Guilt” has officially debuted! The romantic and catchy clip sees Puth singing the song to his long-distance girlfriend and it’s a beautiful, sweet display of true love. Puth officially made his debut as a songwriter and producer with his Billboard Hot 100 top 10 hit “See You Again” earlier this year, and he’s looking to build upon his success by exploring new paths in his music video career. The “Married” singer was recently featured on Big Sean’s “Bounce Back,” which featured a cameo from another one of his smash hit songs, “Marvin’s Room.” So if you’re dreaming of that perfect love song to play while taking a stroll along the beach or running around the mall, Charlie Puth has you covered. The video for “No Guilt” is directed by Carter Lewis and features a cameo from Puth’s dear friend and guest rapper Travis Scott. The video for the song, which currently sits at No. 5 on

Billboard's Top 100 singles chart, is Puth's first music video from his upcoming second studio album, Voicenotes, which is expected to be released this year. Check out the "No Guilt"
