I need to find the characters represented by the numbers or a word. I can get the words by split, but I need a list of the characters and their corresponding values. I need to print the table with each character on a new line. My code is: #!/usr/bin/env python "" >>> when run from commandline * beacons chased character chinese commas eclipse fireflies "reds" reing rose scolded tea "" import sys import re f = open("english.txt") for line in f: print line for character in line.split(): if character in ('', ','): continue else: print character I had expected the program to print the characters represented by the words on a new line. Instead, it printed the words in rows. Another approach: import csv with open("english.txt") as f: reader = csv.reader(f) for row in reader: print row This one shows the characters on a new line. However, I need them to be printed as a table. My question is: How can I d0c515b9f4
