Choosing your best images for editing Unless you're a professional or gifted with a photographic eye, you need to make a choice as to which images you want to spend the time and money to edit. You have to make a choice about which images you are willing to invest the time and money for and which are disposable. I recommend selecting only the best images for any editing so you don't have to spend time and money on a disposable image or only good images. However, you have to decide what the images are that you do want to edit. Sometimes it doesn't matter whether I spend time and money to edit an image or not, because it will be one of several images for a particular project. But, for other projects, I do need to know that the editing adds enough to justify the time and money invested in the image. Here are some images that I may or may not consider to be of good quality to be edited: * **Photos that have good lighting, good framing, and interesting subjects:** These photos may not be as good technically as some others, but they still make a great presentation. You can save time and money by using these images for the presentation, or you can spend money and make edits to them. * **Photos that are technically great but need a little work:** These photos may require a little tweaking or completely replacing the stock image that was purchased from a third-party website. * **Photos that I want to improve:** I almost always make edits to these photos. They may not meet the standard of photography that I'm striving for at the moment, but I improve them anyway. * **Photos that I would love to create but don't have enough time

The Army's ultra-fast 'minivan of death' keeps striking fear in the hearts of civilians across the country The "newly-developed Russian, recoilless rocket," named "Katyusha" or "mountain-rocket," found inside the "modified Fagot" vehicle, can take out an attacking army unit with accuracy that has never been seen before, a senior Russian general has said. The new 60mm rocket system can be mounted on the Fagot vehicle, which was first used in World War II and modified into an anti-personnel weapon in the 1960s. The weapon's name originates from the Fagot "passenger" vehicle used in the 1937 Spanish Civil War. Katyusha rocket launchers can be used for a variety of purposes, including anti-armour weapons. The commander of the Russian Ground Forces, Lieutenant General Sergey Rudskoy, said on Friday that the arsenal of the new Katyusha rocket system consists of more than 250 pieces of artillery. He also noted that it is difficult to defeat this armament, saying that "the Katyusha rocket system is a combination of precision and a high explosion power." Rudskoy also said that the Fagot family of munitions is designed for operations in modern and post-modern warfare, emphasising that, as a successor to the Katyusha, it can be used in urban combat.

Four servicemen were also injured in the incident, which prompted the Emergency Situations Ministry to send a proposal for the development of a new type of "minivan of death" armed with "a similar recoilless rocket." The present invention relates to polymerizable composite-materials for contact lenses, and more specifically, to hydrophilic, thermoset, crosslinked composite contact lenses formed of crosslinked hydrophilic thermosetting polymer matrixes. The prior art is replete with various plastic contact lens materials of which many are in use and some are under
