Thinkdigit is a set of C# programs that enables the complete functionality of a DIGIT magazine publication. The solution allows the user to view various internal and customer documents such as View/Processes, View/Sales, View/Send, View/Customer, and even create and manage their own unique structures. Thinkdigit is different from other programs because it provides a package of C# and MS SQL Server.NET component to be installed on a user's local or networked PC. There is no requirement to load the .NET framework on the client computer. This drastically reduces the overhead for the system and makes the client experience very light on the system resources. The application will read the database from a copy saved on the client computer. It does this by reading the files from the DVD/CD. It does not install or modify the original files from the magazine. If there is interest in the project I will be happy to give more information. Q: How to check if a feature was loaded? How to check if a feature was loaded with any modifier? For example, if I'm loading a feature in QGIS with a group field `qgis_group_layer("layer", "name='group'", "isClosed='0'")` Is there any way in order to check if this group field already exists in the layer? I have a need of this feature for a script on input layers. A: You can use a conditional statement to check if the field exists, for example, `if (FID in (0,1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9)): print "your field"` or to see if your field exists `if (FID not in (0,1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9)): print "your field"` This goes through the FieldList for each of the layer's fields and checks if FID exists In your case you can simply check the group layer: `if (qgis_group_layer("layer", "name='group'", "isClosed='0'")): print "your field"` If this layer exists, there is a field "group" inside it and the field

The Great Distemper The Great Distemper is a play by the British writer, philosopher and critic George Bernard Shaw. It was first produced at the Garrick Theatre on 13 April 1902, and ran for a total of 15 performances. It was Shaw's first attempt at a full-length play, and it was not until some years later that he successfully turned a similar experiment, St. Joan, into a first-class success. The title of the play refers to the Great Plague of the mid-fourteenth century, which devastated the population of England, and on which Shaw was to play several roles in his autobiographical trilogy of plays, Back to Methuselah, Caesar and Cleopatra, and Major Barbara. The play tells the story of the Plague, with a special emphasis on the effects it had upon the personality of a certain "nemesis". Heine is characterised in a way that reveals the powerful influence he had on Shaw's own thinking at the time he wrote the play. Before the play's original production, Shaw wrote a pamphlet which was published in The Mercury to explain his thinking behind the play. References Further reading External links

Q: How do I retain the Ctrl key in my input fields? I have a form on a website which allows users to create new blog posts. It uses the Drupal contributed core blogging form. This form has an extra textfield field above the body of the post. That text field needs to be accessible for users who use the Ctrl key. With the default style, it disappears when ctrl is pressed. What's the best way to retain the Ctrl key? A: You can use jQuery to keep that key pressed. If you're on Drupal 7.x, use the following code: `jQuery(document).ready(function($) { $(document).keyup(function(e) { if (e.ctrlKey) { var curr_field = $('field-name').val(); $('field-name').val(curr_field + e.key);`
