The use of cell phones has been a controversial issue in recent years, with some people saying the devices are distracting or dangerous for drivers. One model of cell phone, called a "smart" phone, is commonly used to take pictures and videos. Police have said that they have identified multiple cell phone photos and video of the arrests and one man says he recorded the entire event on video and took it to the police, but they have not released it to the public. Protester Marc Cooper said he filmed part of the event on his cell phone. "I'm fine with some of it," Cooper said. "You can't take it unless you're willing to make it public. I have a question for the police department: Is this what you want to be known for, for the rest of your career?" The protesters have been allowed to assemble in city parks and streets, but the Missouri governor has moved forward with a curfew in the city starting Monday night. Democratic Missouri U.S. Rep. Defects have been proved to be an effective pathway for enhancing electrochemical properties of micro/nanomaterials. The defects could be introduced in core-shell architectures through sol-gel reactions using polymeric template that offer a promising route to engineer composite micro/nanomaterials. In this work, a new hybrid micro/nanostructure with pore-induced defects is fabricated by combining the polymeric network of microcapillary with polymeric precipitate produced by sol-gel reactions of metal alkoxides and silane coupling agent. In the process, the pore-induced defects originated from the micron-scale microcapillary itself are used to create small nuclei for the precipitation of the silica shell of micro/nanomaterials.
