All that you need to start programming your own games for Roblox is a computer with an internet connection. You can use a web browser to create games without using your own computer. You also don't need to know how to code. Just think of your game as a three-act play. All the programming, design, and story development is done for you. All you have to do is make it fun. Programming with Roblox allows users to create games and play them with friends. Each user starts with a virtual studio, and players of the same user can invite their friends to the studio and play games together. All the programming, design, and story development is done for you. You can distribute your games to the Roblox platform and play them on any device. No downloads are required. You can use different programming languages to build games using a drag-and-drop workflow. Users can design characters, set up scenes, and add gameplay elements such as particle effects. Other features: Roblox offers a catalog of over than one million premade assets you can browse and use to build your own virtual games. You can create games using all of these assets. The Roblox virtual world is a place where users can create and share their own games. Roblox users can design their own avatars, play games with friends, and invite others to play their games. Roblox users can access a variety of different games, both free and paid. For free, there are games that are ad-supported or games that offer in-game assets you can use to create your own games. If you choose to play Roblox games for real money, they usually give you Robux as in-game currency. A game is made up of many smaller components. Many of these components are called "blocks." Every block has parameters that determine what the block does. Each block also has "properties," which control how the block is displayed on screen. A "world" is an interactive map with paths and objects that users can interact with. Some worlds allow a user to walk around, other allow a user to get into the game world to play. And each world has players in it. Gameplay is the act of a user interacting with the objects and locations in a game world. If the goal is to keep the user interested, a game needs to keep the user involved in the action and present different challenges as the game progresses. User interface

Easy-to-use, powerful tool to generate new cheats for Roblox games. Disease Outbreak

Schmelz et al. (2019) reported a measles outbreak in an immigration community in Sweden, with nine cases detected and a high proportion of cases among unvaccinated adolescents. Only 70% of the registered individuals within the affected area had received the measles vaccination; in Sweden the vaccination coverage is at 96%. Description Measles has been endemic in Sweden since it was eliminated from the United States in 2000. In November 2017, a local news website reported an outbreak in Malmö, the third-largest city in Sweden. During 2017 there was an estimated measles outbreak in several European countries, and a measles epidemic in the United States. In 2016, the first cases of measles since the elimination of the disease in the United States had been registered in Europe.[1] In March 2018 the first major measles outbreak since Sweden had eliminated the disease had been detected. The Swedish Institute for Communicable Disease Control reported 16 cases of measles. All but one was among those who arrived in Sweden from countries with high levels of endemic measles transmission, such as Eritrea, Somalia, or Syria, and who did not have documented evidence of measles vaccination. The source of infection for the majority of this infection could not be identified. The outbreak subsided in mid-April, when only three more cases had been detected, all among those who had contracted the virus abroad and returned to Sweden. However, a second outbreak emerged in early May, when nine additional cases were detected.[2] In May 2019, an additional outbreak was reported, and another four cases were confirmed. Of these four, two cases were among those who had returned to Sweden from Russia, one from Eritrea, and one from Serbia. All of these individuals had not been vaccinated against measles. The ninth case was an unvaccinated Swedish citizen who returned from the United States.[3] Investigation The outbreak was confirmed by detection of the virus in throat swabs or serum samples from 15 cases, 14 of them among those who had traveled from foreign countries. All but two, both of whom returned from Eritrea, had not received the measles vaccination. In total, nine individuals with measles were detected. The source of infection for these measles cases was not identified. Outbreak location and timing On April 26, 2018, the local news reported that nine confirmed cases of measles had been identified.
